

THE POWER OF LOVE AND COMPASSION IN THE WORKPLACE

When Google went on a quest to build the perfect team, they learned that the only key element required is whether a team has the ability to create psychological safety. In other words, members listen to one another, have a voice, and can share freely without judgment combined with showing empathy and sensitivity to the feelings and needs of their members. Harvard Business School professor Amy Edmondson published a study in 1999 that defined psychological safety as “...a team climate characterized by interpersonal trust and mutual respect in which people are comfortable being themselves.” To create a workplace where people feel safe and cared for requires leaders and teams to increase human connection. To be human is to bring more love and compassion to the workplace.

Learn how to live and lead with love in this interactive session.

LEARNING OBJECTIVES:

- Define love and compassion in the workplace
- Explore the neuroscience and research of love and compassion
- Learn from top global companies who are leading with love and compassionate leadership
- Discover simple tools and tips to integrate love and compassion to your people and culture
- programs